X TYPES OF BOURBON X

SMALL BATCH BOURBON

While there's no real meaning to the label 'small batch' in terms of federal approval, the real small batch bourbons are easy to pick out in a tasting. Most distilleries age their whiskey and then, when it's ready, blend it all together in a big vat to put into bottles. A small batch Bourbon is made from whiskeys whose barrels (through whatever blend of alchemy, magic, expertise, & luck) were particularly good, as selected by a master distiller. Some distilleries, like Evan Williams, release both (Evan Williams ubiquitous black label and Evan Williams 1783). Other distilleries, like Elijah Craig, make only small batch whiskeys, focusing on age & flavor. Examples are Elijah Craig 12 yr and Four Roses Small Batch.

HIGH RYE BOURBON

By law, Bourbon must be made of at least 51% corn. The other 49% is up to the whim of the distiller. In some cases, the distiller adds a fair amount of rye to the mash, and this is a 'high-rye' bourbon. If you think about the difference between cornbread & a rye loaf, you'll get the idea. Traditional Bourbon with a lot of corn: sweet & heavy. A high-rye bourbon or rye whiskey: spicy & light. Examples are Basil Hayden and Bulleit Bourbon.

WHEATED BOURBON

Just like high-rye bourbon, a wheated bourbon utilizes the soft, herbal flavors of wheat to bring balance to the finished product. Be warned! For many, a good wheated bourbon is a gateway whiskey, opening up a whole new world of brown spirit exploration. Examples are Bernheim Wheat Whiskey and Rebel Yell.

BOTTLED IN BOND

There aren't many bonded whiskeys left in production. The Bottled-in-Bond act was enacted in 1897 in response to the influx of crummy, adulterated booze on the market that was being advertised as Bourbon. It was an effort by the government to legitimize a home-grown industry and guarantee the quality of the liquid inside the bottle. All Bottled in Bond whiskeys must be made by one distillery during one single distillation season. Further, it must be aged in a federally bonded warehouse for at least four years, and must be bottled at 100 proof. The resulting whiskeys are strong, but very subtle, with lots of complex spice, char, & vanilla notes. Examples are Henry McKenna 10 Year or Rittenhouse Rye.

SINGLE BARREL BOURBON

Much like a single vineyard selection at a winery, a single-barrel bourbon is the ultimate expression of a distillers craft and care. By some unrepeatable blend of alchemy, skill, magic, & luck, these Bourbons are pulled from barrels that are the purest expression of a distiller's hopes & dreams. Hand selected and bottled out of one barrel, they are usually (but not always) hand numbered with the date of creation, bottling, and the barrel number. Each release will be a little different than the next, but all will showcase the best that American ingenuity has to offer, with clear, clean expressions of corn, oak, toast, spice, & vanilla. Examples are Evan Williams Single Barrel and Wild Turkey Russel's Reserve Single Barrel.
